Dear Bud:

The game has just come to a happy completion for Yale but I feel lousy about the trouble with the line. As I explained to Red over the phone, by sheer luck we finally found out that our line had been crossed with the line of a telephone over at the Drama School. By chance, one of our members who was over there called up someone or other and happened to notice that he was listening to a basketball game at the same time. As you well know, this ain't right.

But alas, the sad story continues since one of our technical geniuses walked into the studio somewhere during the middle of the first period and informs me that he had carefully worked the whole situation out ~~carefully~~ and come up with the answer. Naturally, a tech man can never be wrong and with some of the craziest manipulations of our line amplifier and with some of the maddest connections you'd ever want to see, he "fixed it."

Much to my delight at that moment we were on the phone with the telephone company in Boston ~~at that moment~~ and he said that we were coming through loud and clear. Til I hear from you, I'll never really know what happened.

Bud, I am sorry for all the trouble that occurred this evening and I hope that it did not kill your listening audience and I'm sure it's a grand one.....hope to be seeing you soon,

Sincerely,

Karl Honeystein
